TOPAZ AND MARBLE FOUND

Also Bituminous Coal, Fossils and Thousands of Wingless Insects.

[By Cable to The Tribun#]

London, April 3.-A further account of Captain Scott's Antarctic expedition is published to-day. In one respect the second cable message resembles the struggle against adverse circumstances. on January 3, before the latter struck southward with his four companions for the pole, 150 miles away, his last supporting party under Lieutenant Evans underwent the severest hardships on the return journey to the base. Lieutenant Evans himself was stricken down with scurvy, and finally he was left behind a companion until help could se brought by a relief party. By travelling his life, and he is now convalescent.

There is also published a report on the scientific work of the expedition. The men comprising the geological party suffered greatly from blizzards, but never theless were able to work, and found masses of marble and topaz. Thousands of wingless insects of two different species were observed.

Sir Ernest Shackleton considers this the most remarkable scientific discovery of the expedition, and says the matter will be of the greatest interest to biolo-

Mr. Lursons, who was recently the chief defendant in the suit of the government against the sugar trust, looked well and happy as sat beside his wife. When a reporter asked him how he "elt, the eighty-three year old lawyer smiled, and before he could answer

Mrs. Parsons said for him "You have only to look at him to see how he feels." Mr. Parsons said he was going abroad for short visit to Paris and would return to this country in May. He added that he was going to attend to a matter of special importance, which was of a purely "personal" nature.

Asked if he had any desire to comment on the findings in the late Sugar case trial, Mr. Parsons beamed happily as he said: 'I am one of those old-fashioned lawyers who do not try their cases in the newspapers, but I wish to pay my respects to the newspapers, which I think treated me very fairly and courteously." Another passenger on the Mauretania was A. L. Erlanger, of the theatrical producing firm of Klaw & Erlanger. Mr. Erlanger said he was going abroad to superintend the production of "The Pink Lady" and "Ben-Hur" in London. He will also keep his eyes open for novelties for the coming season, he said, and hoped to bring back something that would interest New York's theatregoing public. Charles Frohman, the theatrical man-

G. A. R. TO PROBE CASE Jee Howard, with War Record and 50

Years in Navy Yard, Laid Off.

Members of the Grand Army of the Republic in Brooklyn are displaying much in terest in the case of Joe Howard, who was recently laid off at the navy yard, under the operation of the new efficiency law regarding service in the yard. Howard, who was the oldest sailmaker in the employ of the department, has served half a cento-night. The conference will begin to- tury in the Brooklyn yard, except the time morrow and will continue through Friday. when he was away with the 59th Regiment and the party will leave here for New of New York Militia during the Civil War, and it is claimed by his friends that, as a veteran, he is entitled to consideration over those who have no war record. Yard officials, however, say that the law regarding veterans holds when men are being employed, but that the efficiency ruling supersedes it when it comes to reducing the force. Howard's case is by no means an exceptional one, and the Grand Army of the Republic has taken the matter up with the determination of Anding out just where its members stand in relation to the government service.
